

Chorēgia: Provision and Stewardship

Provision for faithful service, governed by transparency, accountability and responsible limits.

426-CHOREGIA-FRAMEWORK | Version 1.0 | October 25, 2026

1 Corinthians 4:1-2; 1 Peter 4:10-11; 2 Corinthians 9:6-15

Confirmed name and purpose

Chorēgia is the confirmed name of the provision and stewardship pathway within 426 IMAGO DEI. Its public spelling preserves the ē. This edition uses the approved brand name without treating a creative title as a declaration of legal entity status.

The pathway brings together the purpose of provision, support priorities and accountable use of resources. God first means that the method of raising and administering resources must serve the ministry's convictions.

Stewardship before solicitation

First Corinthians 4:2 places faithfulness at the center of stewardship. Resources entrusted for a stated purpose should be handled according to that purpose, with responsible oversight and documented decisions.

Second Corinthians 9 should be read in its setting of generosity and provision for service. It must not become a commercial promise that a particular gift will guarantee personal wealth, healing or a spiritual result.

Potential support priorities

Developing priorities include access to Scripture and study resources, responsible teaching, practical outreach and the capacity of approved service relationships. A stated priority is not an award commitment.

Each proposed activity should explain the need, intended recipients, resource requirement, responsible leader and evidence that the work can be delivered. Avoid numerical targets that have no validated budget or operating baseline.

Operating gate

Giving and support applications are not open through this pathway at publication. No tax-deductibility claim is made. This website does not represent that a foundation, grant fund or charitable status has been established.

Before solicitation begins, confirm the responsible organization, permitted payment method, recordkeeping, designation of funds, review responsibilities, reporting process and recipient communications. Publish actual eligibility and decision criteria before opening applications.

Accountability and reporting

Maintain records of receipts, approved expenses, support decisions and outcomes. Separate sensitive personal information from public reporting. Financial and impact statements should use documented figures, clear periods and a responsible reviewer.

Public reporting should distinguish money received, money committed and money spent. A sale of apparel should not be described as a charitable contribution without a valid basis for that description.

Relationship to the wider ecosystem

Chorēgia supports ministry-first work rather than controlling access to Scripture, prayer or salvation resources. Participation and purchases do not determine a person's spiritual standing.

Future growth should follow evidence, oversight and capacity. This framework is reviewed when the organization, funding mechanisms or actual support programs change.
